

A word about this catalog...

The Viewpoint catalog was the only catalog of its kind. In 2001, the last year it was printed, it contained more than 470 pages and featured wireframe images of more than 10,000 3D models.

Between 2002 and 2008, thousands of additional models were added and the entire collection was branded as The Archive™. Today The Archive contains an amazing 16,504 3D models. Most (but not all) of these models can be seen in the pages of this scanned version of the 2002 catalog.

This document does not show all of the models included in The Archive because not every model was included in the paper catalog when it was originally printed, and it does not contain the thousands of new models added since then. We estimate that this catalog shows approximately 60% of the models actually included in The Archive.

Since the last printing of the paper catalog, we have updated the subcategories of the models in The Archive. For this reason, you may notice differences between the subcategories shown in this catalog, and those used in The Archive.

Finally, scattered among these pages you will see references to NURBS models. These NURBS models are not included with The Archive, however in most cases, polygonal equivalents were created and included.

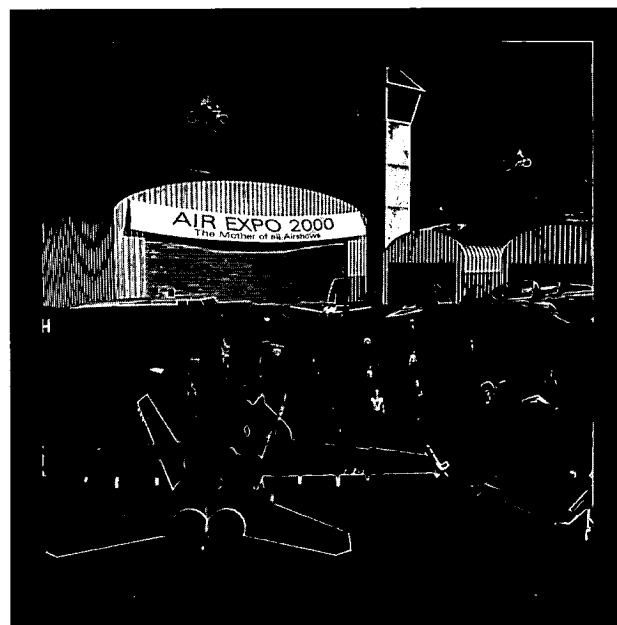

We hope you enjoy browsing through these pages. They really help to show what an amazing value The Archive really is. More info about The Archive can always be found on our website; www.digimation.com.

Visible Human Project

generated from the National Library of Medicine's Visible Human Project. (For more information on the Visible Human Project go to www.nlm.nih.gov/research/visible/visible_human.html)

This male skeleton was created by tracing 1,871 cross sectional slices of an actual human cadaver provided through the Visible Human Project. Using highly sophisticated tracing software, the medical experts at Visible Productions, Inc. connected these slices one by one to create this highly accurate human skeleton.
